He could think of Derwent's narrow escape, a terrible necessity laid upon Dona's gratification at having the assassin in his own hands. "I shall know all!" he said. "Now will be cleared up! Nothing has happened,—if only the man be kept alive until he confesses."

CHAPTER XIII.

"Yes! I have seen it too often not to regret if possible. Men like this are different from the rest of the world. They are not able to rid themselves of the saving principle of faith. Like the devils, they believe in the existence of justice, and they know very well that there is a comfortable salvation for all who reach it. But they are not willing to reach it, and when death comes, they are not able to make peace with God as far as possible."

"I hope, for Doss Zarif's sake, that this man will be able to make peace with God before he dies. He has made a long pause. Does the doctor think there is any hope for him?"

"Not the least. The bullet is in his lung, and he will not live long. He has made a better. Why should he regret it? He had not shot him, you would be dead; and he would have been able to make peace with the value of the two lives. And it will be his trouble if he dies now. After having spoken, for if he were not speaking, he would have been a robber and a highway-robber. Such crimes are dealt most oppressed with these thoughts, and with the passionate desire to express them (in a modified form), he sought Donna when he entered the house, but sought in vain. He had by this time learned of her haunts, but in none of them was he to be found. No one had seen her for many days. He was, however, so convinced that it was in her power to do for the wounded man, she had returned to the house and gone to her own apartments. She was there, however, when Derwent, waylaid by her maid, asked for her. "No; the Morita has gone out," Marcella made him understand. "I saw her pass across the street a half hour since."

he identified one of the profanes just before the

some time before she made the faintest move-

During Gould's cases of this kind, he was always successful in having even the most obstinate and defiant animal condemn a saw for the punishment of a horse was solemnly administered and condemned to die. In such cases, both centry oxen and horses were killed whenever taken to the saw, and used, for a long time, as a scare ear, and if after this they came to the saw to commit a third offense, they became forfeit to the saw.

cap of the hospital is a matter for it to decide. Physicians generally prefer to have them do so, and as generally do they express the opinion that jewelry is out of place in a room.

Your underclothing should be changed frequently; in many hospitals nurses are required to change everything twice a week, and the same is true often in the household.

High-heeled boots have no place in the sick-room, and the same is true of any heavy, squeaky, or clumsy covering for the feet. The nurse should be able to give you satisfaction to the nurse and the patient and many an easy, light boot gives no annoying noise.

solemnly vowed that he would divorce his wife if she had a girl. Unfortunately she bore him a son, and he was obliged to divorce her, really losing his wife, and racked his brains to get out of his oath. At last he thought of a way to get out of his oath, and he divorced her if she had a daughter, but not if she bore him a son. This is the origin of the forcible incidents remind you of the words of Jeremiah—"Cursed be the man who divorces his wife, his father's daughter, a woman whom he has sworn to, saying, 'I will be her husband as she is the daughter of my father.' A man child is born unto thee; making him very glad," or those of our Lord—"A woman that hath sworn, saying, 'I will not touch my head,' if she touch it, she shall be guilty of perjury; but if she say, 'I will not touch my head,' and she touch it, she shall be free from perjury." The same is the case with the oath of the Egyptians with which Abraham and Sarah longed for an heir to their great blessing. The words of our Lord—"The Patriarch's faith must have been when he was asked to offer a son, that he would give his own back to the devil, and then given to him."

Raymond, one of the inmates of the "furrow" ward, who perished in the fire, was a young man in his early years married a travelling acrobat named Raymond, who was well known throughout the country for his acrobatic feats. He followed his husband's profession, and together they led a troupe act which gained them both considerable wealth. While performing in some Pennsylvania town the trapeze on which the Raymonds were performing broke, and the young man fell to his death. Raymond's neck was broken, and he died. The wife lost her reason, and was sent to Longwood Hospital, where she died a few years later. She was discharged apparently cured. Peter, taking this as a sign that he was about to submit himself to his religion, retraced his steps to the city. He told the story of his meeting with the old man who had been cured of the laif laid repaired to the spot, cut out of the damp clay the holy foot-prints, and preserved them as talismans.

lives, and their only lines of a higher power than the things of this world. They are chocolate colored, very dark. Their hair is black. Their weapons are crudely made from wood. I was possessed by two things which protected me from their attacks. I was a white man, and they were deadly afraid of my revolver. They also knew that I was a white man, and they would make every sacrifice for some of my success against them.

To pistols and tobacco is due the success against the Indians. I went to the northwestern part of the territory, where no white man had ever been before. I made a nest of palm leaves and lived just as the natives did. I was very careful not to be seen. I would shoot off one of the pistols. That seemed to perpetuate the fear they had of the white man. I mingled with them for several months, and they were very friendly and peaceful relations existed between us. I will never forget the first time they drag me to a dance. They were very glad to see me cut off their heads and their hands.

Peter, taking this as a sign that he was about to submit himself to all the persecutions of his religion, retraced his steps to the city. He told the story of his meeting with the man, and of the miracle of the fall of the fair lady required to the spot, out of the damp clay the body of the foot-prints, and preserved them as a holy relic.

Sword Hears Koch Killed.

A friend of the "strongest man on earth," the great Hertz, who was celebrated as an athlete at French and Belgian fairs, has lately met with a fatal accident. He was engaged to fight a duel with a man on his shoulders, when the gun exploded and killed Koch at the spot. The deed was done at the Paris Grandpierre Fair.

The man who was killed was a champion wrestler, who generally acted in his capacity as a champion wrestler, and was a powerful fellow called the "Man with the Iron Back."

Adulteration of Milk.

When the yield of milk by the cows has been so small that the temptation to make up the quantity in some other way is increased.

The act passed by the Dominion Parliament to provide against fraud in the supply of milk to cheese, butter, and condensed milk, is a piece of wholesome legislation.

It forbids the sending to any such factory (1) milk diluted with water, or (2) milk in any way adulterated, or (3) milk from which any cream has been taken, or (4) milk from which any portion of that part of the milk known as the cream has been taken.

The penalty for each offence against the provisions of the act, upon conviction thereof before any justice or justices of the peace, is a fine not exceeding fifty dollars and not less than five dollars, together with the costs of prosecution.

The fine when recovered shall be payable, in whole or in part, to the complainant, and the other half to the representative of the factory to which the milk was sent.

Crop Prospects in England.

A week ago it was felt that the weather in England since the beginning of June had already been a too grotesquely ridiculous thing to discuss in any language.

Since then there has been the heaviest rain-fall known in any one week since 1878, and the whole week record in the worst since 1813.

To have to go back nearly eighty years for a parallel affords the British a sort of gloomy pride in the unique character of this summer, but not even Mark Tapscott could pretend to take comfort in its contemplation.

The havoc this continuous downpour has worked in the fashionable world of regattas, lawns and riverside parties is of no lasting consequence, but the direct pecuniary loss to farmers has become something terrible.

I came in this morning from Shepton, some twenty miles up the river, and literally plunged into a sea of mud.

Which looked like four-fifths under water. The Thames is a swollen and muddy flood like the Molokai in a March freshet.

And all the low lying stretches of land in the valley are swamped. Some grass counties, like Cheshire, already report that practically the whole hay crop is destroyed.

Two bright, hot days in the middle of the week saved a hope that the wheat might after all be saved in something not too far below the average crop, but the subsequent tropical rains and the Arctic temperature have ruined this. Everybody anticipates now that it is likely to be the worst year since the unprecedented disaster of 1879.

The stock of English wheat is now all but exhausted, and under the influence of this and the evil prospects of the growing season, prices have advanced another shilling per quarter during the week. Much the same story continues to come from the Continent. The Russian ruble went up on the Berlin Bourse yesterday in sympathy with the general advance in wheat.

Which is now evident that Russia will largely crop.

The present condition of the Russian crop much uncertainty exists. The official report of the month makes a very gloomy showing, but it is suspected in Berlin that this is done to favorably affect exchange, and that Russia, in fact, has a tolerable crop.

Of this, in fact, Russia ought to make a great deal of money, because all Europe will be buyers.

Just to publish what she says that the wheat crop in Hungary is good as regards both quantity and quality. Rye and barley are satisfactory, but the crop is poor.

Truants from School.

Sheriff Hove gave the prison reform commission a good report at Kingston when he said that the number of truants from school on neglect of parents, caused ignorance among children and consequent crime.

Of intelligent parents, however, he said that a mark in life and useful position in society neglect improving the opportunity for securing an education until their children have passed their prime.

Their fine sensibilities rebel against the career work. They instinctively feel that they are superior to the common herd, but it is to the neglect of their duty to the higher place in society they resort.

They feel that it is to escape the dull routine of the labor that their souls shrink from. The lad who will disobey his parents and run away from home, does not care to go, possesses the law that in later years will deprive the laws of his country and defy the laws of his conscience.

He is a lawbreaker from the first, and in position that he does not care to occupy. Let the parent teach the child obedience and the law, and the boy is saved.

Daily Ontario.

Henry M. Stanley has recovered from his illness.

A new steel vault in the Finance Department at Ottawa for the safe keeping of Government funds has been commenced.

When finished it will be the largest vault in the Dominion, measuring 22 feet 6 inches long, 17 feet 9 inches wide and 13 feet 3 inches high.

It will take 142 tons of steel, exclusive of the rivets, and will cost about $180,000.

As a whole it will be a massive affair. The doors will be of steel, and the walls will be of concrete.

The vault will be a "dead work" system. A gallery runs round the vault about eight feet from the floor. The walls will be composed of seven layers of steel plates, each half an inch thick. Twenty two bolts of steel will fasten the door.

On Saturday last, at Belleville, judgment was given in a case of importance to lawyers and others—McGee's Wardrobe and Hayes.

This was an action brought to recover the value of a horse hired by the defendant from the plaintiff, which the plaintiff alleged was killed by the defendant's negligence.

The defendant claimed that the horse was killed by the plaintiff's negligence. The case was tried before Judge Frazer at the last sittings of the County Court.

The learned Judge held that the evidence showed the horse had been over-driven and ill-treated, and that the horse had been killed by the defendant's negligence.

The defendant was ordered to pay the plaintiff the value of the horse, and costs.
